

Seconds or samples - refunds

Refund rights

Consumers have the same refund rights on seconds and samples as they would have on full-price products.

However, they cannot claim a refund for problems that:

- the store or seller told them about
- they should have noticed when examining the product
- were indicated in photos or the item description on the website.

Case Study

Example only (outcome may differ in individual cases):

Eric buys a pair of shoes labelled as 'seconds'. A tag attached to the shoes says there is a problem with the stitching.

When the stitching splits, Eric cannot claim a refund, repair or replacement. However, he can do so if another fault develops, such as the sole cracking.
